

ABSTRACT

A digital transmitter detects a security code and determines whether a user of the digital transmitter has proper security authorization. The digital transmitter sends data corresponding to printed material scanned into the digital transmitter to one or more destination addresses selected by the user when the user has proper security authorization and implements security measures when the user does not have proper security authorization.